

NON-MARINE MOLLUSCA OF THE NORTH MOLUCCAN ISLANDS
HALMAHERA, TERNATE, BATJAN and OBI

by

W. S. S. VAN BENTHEM JUTTING

(Zoological Museum, Amsterdam)

In 1951 a party of botanists from the Herbarium Bogoriense at Bogor (Java) made an expedition to the islands of Halmahera and Ternate under the leadership of Mr. P. GROENHART. Two mantries of the Museum Zoologicum Bogoriense joined the expedition, to make zoological collections for the latter institute.

Two years later, in 1953, Mr. A. M. R. WEGNER, at present Director of the Museum Zoologicum travelled in the islands of Batjan, Obi and Majau, collecting non-marine molluscs in the two first named islands (fig. 1).

The molluscs of both expeditions were entrusted to me for identification and a report. The sorting out of the material, and some preliminary identification was done by Mr. L. J. M. BUTOT, assistant of the Museum Zoologicum at Bogor until 1956. His introductory work has greatly facilitated my task.

In addition to the species from the two above mentioned expeditions I give a few records based on shells presented to the Amsterdam Zoological Museum by Mr. H. TH. DE BOOY, at that time an officer of the Dutch Navy, who collected in the islands of Obi, Batjan and Halmahera in 1926 and 1928.

In the Rijksmuseum van Natuurlijke Historie of Leiden I found several collections of shells, partly identified, partly unidentified, from the islands of Halmahera, Ternate, Batjan and Obi. Most of these have never been published before. By the courtesy of the Director of this Museum and of the Curator of molluscs, Dr. C. O. VAN REGTEREN ALTENA, I am allowed to include these records in my paper.

All this material, together with older references in the literature, has served to compile the following account of non-marine mollusca of the four North Moluccan Islands mentioned above. The material from the Zoological Museum, Amsterdam is denoted ZMA, that of the Rijksmuseum van Natuurlijke Historie, RMNH.

In the Senckenberg Museum at Frankfurt am Main and in the British Museum (Natural History) London I compared some of my shells with the type material of previous expeditions, now preserved in these institutions.

With each species are quoted (1) the original diagnosis, (2) such later descriptions and figures as are expedient for a better understanding of the species, (3) the records in the literature for Halmahera, Ternate, Batjan and Obi and (4) the localities in each of these four islands.

In the Table of Distribution I have added the land and freshwater molluscs of the island of Morotai. In 1941 I published an account of the non-marine molluscs of this island (VAN BENTHEM JUTTING, Treubia, 18, p. 22-27). As Morotai geologically forms one organic whole with the other North Moluccan Islands there is ample reason to include its malacofauna in the comparative table of distribution.

The records from the other North Moluccan Islands (Tidore, Mareh, Moti, Makian, Kajoa, Groot and Klein Tawalli, etc.) are so scanty that it is not necessary to consider them.

At my request Mr. WEGNER kindly provided me with some details of the general topography and natural history, together with some sketch maps of the islands in which he travelled. I have also received from the North Moluccan Expedition 1951 a list of localities together with their altitudes above sea level. The most important particulars are given here:

H a l m a h e r a (18000 km²).

Djailolo, town and capital, sea level.

Atjengo, village 5 km E of Djailolo, 50 - 100 m alt.

Galela, village 6 km E of Djailolo, 50 - 100 m alt.

Akelamo, village 10 km E of Djailolo, 50 - 100 m alt.

Goal Plains, between Akelamo and the village of Goal, 300-500 m alt.

Mumar, river in the Sembilan mountains, 200 - 300 m alt.

Mount Sembilan, near divide of the Kakatua mentawai, 600 m alt.

Biaur, village in the Sembilan complex, 600 m alt.

Toliwang, village near E coast of the northern peninsula, 50 m alt.

Dodinga, village at the junction of the northern peninsula with the „body” of the island, sea level.

Weda, village in the southern peninsula, sea level.

T e r n a t e (137 km²).

Ternate, town and capital.

B a t j a n (2370 km²).

Labuha, town and capital, sea level. Very poor, cultivated environs, overgrown with alang-alang and weeds.

Babang, village at the N coast, sea level.

Telaga Manga Joang, lake 6 km S of Babang, about 500 m diam., beautifully situated, surrounded by a circa 10 m wide zone of water plants.

Wajaua, village of some 400 inhabitants on Wajaua bay, sea level.

Salamuku River, in S. E. Batjan, 6 km W of Wajaua. The river has a sandy bottom with scattered stones of various sizes. There is a rather important difference in level in the course of the river.

Obi (2475 km²).

Laiwui, village at the N coast and capital of the island, sea level.

Anggai, village at the N coast, 2½ km E of Laiwui, with limestone hills in the environs.

Telaga Obi, lake at about 160 m alt., length about 4 km, breadth 2 km. On its W, N and S sides the lake is surrounded by hills. To the E it opens to a plain of some km width. Beyond this plain the mountains begin.

Kali Telaga, river which forms the outflow of Telaga Obi, about 10 m broad and rather deep.

Wajaloar (or Wai Lower), village and river at the S coast, sea level.

Fluk (or Flock), village at the S coast, sea level.

Obi Latu, small island off the NW coast of Obi.

ZOOGEOGRAPHICAL CONSIDERATIONS.

When comparing the foregoing account of the molluscs of the North Moluccan Islands¹⁾ with those of neighbouring regions in the Malay Archipelago it is evident that most of the fresh-water molluscs (42 species), the family Ellobiidae (15 species) and some 17 species of land snails are so commonly distributed in a great number of Malaysian islands that they afford no clue to the affinities of the North Moluccas with any other region of the Malay Archipelago. These species have therefore been excluded from the zoogeographical considerations.

Of the remaining 107 species only a very small number shows affinities in a western direction (Celebes and Borneo), viz. Trochomorpha ternatana and Eurybasis conicoides, or in a northern direction (Talaud Is. and Philippines), viz. Platyrrhaphe parvula, Cyclotus pruinus and Planispira zonalis.

To the east, in the Papuan region, such species as Sulfurina parva fa. lectrina, Leptopoma cinctellum, L. decipiens, L. papuanum, L. massena, L. calare, Planispira endoptycha, P. zoonalis, P. loxotropis, P. kurri, P. corniculatum, Chloritis concisa rubra, Papuina lanceolata, P. vitrea suggest only a slight migration or exchange of faunal elements. Some of these species point to a Papuan ancestry and some to a Moluccan origin. The procedure was, therefore, a two way migration or transport.

Connections with the South Moluccan Islands, Buru, Ambon, Ceram and

¹⁾ As I have already said in the Introduction the list of species of Morotai Is. (1800 km²), published in 1941 (VAN BENTHEM JUTTING, Treubia, 18, p. 22-27) is included in the Table of Distribution

Connections with the South Moluccan Islands, Buru, Ambon, Ceram and the Banda group, have even been less frequent, only species such as Palaeohelicina idae, Leptopoma perlucidum fa. latilabre, L. perlucidum fa. minus, Omphalotropis ceramensis, Lamprocystis subangulata and Trochomorpha timorensis inhabiting both groups of islands.

After excluding the five above mentioned categories, the ubiquitous species as well as those with affinities to the N, W, E and S, there remain just over a hundred species, subspecies and forms (last column of Table of Distribution) which are not found beyond the North Moluccas. This seems a high percentage, and it corroborates once more the fact that — as I have already remarked on previous occasions — the evolution and distribution of fresh-water molluscs in this part of the world have presumably pursued a different course of development from that of the land snails. Whether this difference in migration and speciation is caused by difference in historical or in ecological conditions cannot yet be ascertained.

Although the foregoing systematic account and the table of distribution of the malacofauna of the North Moluccan Islands are based on more than 180 species, the total list of species is certainly not yet complete. Small species of land snails such as Microcystina, Liardetia, Gastrocopta, Pupisoma and the Diplommatinidae have not, or hardly, been recorded. Even among the larger land snails more intensive collecting would surely bring to light a greater number of species.

The most striking features in the faunal composition of the North Moluccas are:

- 1) the absence of Pila, Viviparus, Lymnaea, the Corbiculidae and the fresh-water mussels (Naiads);
- 2) the absence of Amphidromus, Hemiplecta, Cyclophorus, Alycaeus, Bradybaena similaris and Achatina fulica. Of Chloritis there occurs only one species;
- 3) the luxuriant development of the genus Planispira, both in number of species and of specimens;
- 4) the presence of the endemic genus Pyrochilus;
- 5) the presence of the genus Miratesta.

 1901. KOBELT, in: MARTINI & CHEMNITZ, N. Syst. Conch. Cab. Vol. 1, Part 19, 444, pl. 55, fig. 6 (Leptopoma decipiens - Batchian).
 1902. KOBELT, Tierreich, 16, p. 7 (Leptopoma decipiens - Batjan und Misol).

Localities: Batjan (PFEIFFER; REEVE; KOBELT).

Remarks: The difference between Leptopoma decipiens PFEIFFER and the next species, L. papuanum DOHRN, seems to have deceived authors. After the original description only REEVE and KOBELT (1901) have clearly understood L. decipiens. WALLACE, although he distinguished between the two species, confounded the papuan localities of L. papuanum and the moluccan localities of L. decipiens. A modern revision of the old material is desirable.

Remarks: KOBELT (1906, MARTINI & CHEMNITZ, N. Syst. Conch. Cab. Vol. 1, Part 19, p. 459) united Leptopoma fulgurans DAUTZENBERG with L. megalostoma MOELLENDORFF, but I cannot agree with him in this respect. Therefore I will treat them here as separate species.

Remarks: Under the preceding species I gave as my opinion that Leptopoma megalostoma is different from L. fulgurans. KOBELT's figure (l.c.) probably represents L. fulgurans.

Lastly the sculpture of the initial whorls of Cyclotus ternatanus is different from that in Pterocyclus moluccensis.

Localities: Halmahera (WALLACE).

Remarks: The species was originally described from Ceram. WALLACE, however, recorded it from Gilolo (= Halmahera). Two years later MARTENS p. 161) definitely stated: "Insel Ceram, Wallace". Why did MARTENS declare untrue the possibility of Omphalotropis ceramensis living in Halmahera? Until new material will be found the locality Halmahera remains questionable.

Pseudocyclotus wegneri* n. sp. (fig. 2)

Shell turbinate, white (only bleached specimens seen). First 1½ whorls nooth, following ones finely sculptured by vertical and spiral ridges. Somewhat transparent and with little lustre.

Whorls 4½, regularly increasing in diameter, the last one large and inflated. All whorls very convex. Suture deep. Periphery rounded. Last whorl not descending.

Fig. 2. Pseudocyclotus wegneri n. sp. Holotype. a. front view, SOLEH del.; b. basal view, UKAI del.; c. detail of structure, more enlarged. UKAI del.
 Fig. 3. Curvella acutiuscula n. sp. Paratype; SOLEH del.

Top pointed, but not sharp. Base rounded. Umbilicus open, moderately wide.

Aperture almost circular. Peristome continuous, only attached to the penultimate whorl along a small distance in the angular corner. Columellar margin slightly thickened, outer margin sharp. There is no auriform lobe in the columellar region.

Operculum unknown.

Dimensions (in mm):

	holotype	paratype
height	3.9	4.—
width	3.2	damaged
height of aperture	1.6	damaged

The holotype has been figured.

Type locality: Island of Obi, near Anggai, October 1953, collected by A. M. R. WEGNER.

There are only few species with which Pseudocyclotus wegneri can be compared. The only other species recorded from the North Moluccas is P. brunneus (MOELLENDORFF, 1902) from Obi, but this species is more than twice as large as our new species and has a much higher spire.

P. liratulus (MARTENS, 1864) from Ambon and Saparua is rather similar in shape, but has much greater dimensions and a stronger sculpture.

P. tristis (TAPPARONE CANEFRI, 1883) from Southern New Guinea has a broader spire, with more whorls, and a narrower umbilicus.

Curvella acutiuscula (BOETTGER, ms) n. sp. (fig. 3).

Shell broad-turreted, whitish, with straw-yellow periostracum. Somewhat transparent, with soft lustre. Finely striated according to the lines of growth. The striae are somewhat curved, especially just below the suture. No spiral striation, but sometimes with narrow transparent spiral bands, especially on the last whorl.

Whorls $7\frac{1}{2}$ (in the holotype), to 7 or $6\frac{1}{2}$ in the paratypes. Regularly increasing in size, the last one large and inflated. All whorls somewhat convex, suture well impressed. Periphery rounded. Top pointed, but not sharp, base rounded. Umbilicus closed.

Aperture pear-shaped to oval, pointed in the angular corner, rounded at the base. Position a little oblique. Peristome not continuous, acute, not thickened or reflected. Columellar side twisted and a little protruding at the base.

Dimensions (in mm):

	holotype	paratypes (Senckenb. Mus.)						paratypes (Zool. Mus. Amst.)
		14	15	15	14	13.5	inc.	13.8	13.7	inc.
height	16	14	15	15	14	13.5	inc.	13.8	13.7	inc.
height of aperture	7	7.2	7.2	7	inc.	7	inc.	6.8	6.9	inc.

The first paratype has been figured.

The holotype is a rather slender shell; all the paratypes are more obese.

Type locality: Eastern part of Ternate, 3500 feet alt., collected by BRUNO TRUBELL in 1892.

Holotype (no. 145516) and 6 paratypes (no. 145517) in the Senckenberg Museum, Frankfurt am Main, three other paratype in the Zoological Museum, Amsterdam.

Compared with the other species of Curvella of the Malay Archipelago the new species belongs to the group of imperforate forms. Species like C. timor-lautensis RENSCH, 1930, C. quadrasi MOELLENDORFF, 1893, C. scirvis QUADRAS & MOELLENDORFF, 1895, C. perforata QUADRAS & MOELLENDORFF, 1890, C. philippinica PILSBRY, 1906 and C. umbilicata MOELLENDORFF, 1890 all have an open umbilicus.

Of the non-perforate species C. floresiana RENSCH, 1930 is much smaller, C. grateloupi PFEIFFER, 1846 has less convex whorls and its free peristome margin is peculiarly arching forwards; C. decurtata QUADRAS & MOELLENDORFF, 1895 is smaller, with fewer whorls, and the free peristome margin receding above; C. brevis QUADRAS & MOELLENDORFF, 1896 is much smaller and the ratio height: width is different.

RENSCH (1932, Zool. Jahrb. (Syst.) 63, p. 109) placed Opeas ternatanum BOETTGER, 1891 in Curvella. The peristome of this species, however, especially the columellar margin is quite different from what is usual in Curvella, this region being straight in Opeas ternatanum instead of curved. Hence I am inclined to classify BOETTGER's species as Lamellaxis ternatanus (see below).

Lamprocystis subangulata BOETTGER, 1891.

Localities: Halmahera (SMITH); Ternate (BOETTGER; SMITH); Ternate (ZMA); Batjan (BOETTGER; SMITH).

Remarks: From the Senckenberg Museum I received on loan a number of shells of Lamprocystis subangulata BOETTGER, collected in Banda Neira, Ambon, Ternate, Tidore and Batjan. In my opinion they are all conspecific. In the specimens of the North Moluccas the columellar wall is just a trifle more reflected over the umbilicus than in the specimens of the South Moluccas.

1915. FULTON, Proc. Malac. Soc. London, 11, p. 324 (Planispira quadrifasciata - no locality).

Localities: Obi (ROLLE).

Remarks: FULTON (l.c.) united Planispira kendigiana (and some other forms) with P. quadrifasciata. In my opinion P. kendigiana is sufficiently distinct to stand as a good species.

Remarks: Under the preceding species I referred already to the fact that FULTON (l.c.) included too many forms in Planispira quadrifasciata. At least P. kendigiana must be considered a distinct species.

Remarks: The shell which BAVAY (1908, Nova Guinea, 5, Zool. p. 281) mentioned from Ternate under Helix (Papuina) lanceolata is not a Papuina at all, but a Chloritis sp. It is very unlikely that a Chloritis should occur in Ternate. Probably a lamentable error in labelling caused the confusion. Therefore it is better to remove this record entirely from the fauna of Ternate.

WALLACE (1865, Proc. Zool. Soc. London, p. 410), afterwards repeated by TAPPARONE CANEFRI (1883, Ann. Mus. Civ. Stor. Nat. Genova, 19, p. 138) recorded Papuina gaberti LESSON from Batjan. As this species is a typically Papuan element, the occurrence in the North Moluccan Islands is doubtful.

Amphidromus sinistralis (REEVE, 1849) was recorded by ZILCH, (1953 Arch. Moll. Kunde, 82, p. 133) from Halmahera. This is an erroneous quotation from KOBELT (1897, Abh. Senckenb. 24, p. 79) where it was recorded from the Minahasa in North Celebes.
